Call with Tran — Notes & Agenda

PixSort Pre-Launch

Dream Outcome

- Tran shares her workflow and naturally lands on how albums would improve it
- She agrees on re-sort / moving photos between categories
- She connects you to creators willing to share their workflows
- She tells you at what threshold of creator this becomes valuable and for what content types
- You leave with a collaboration structure for the Founding Creator program
- Clear next steps on connections, collaboration, and the Skool speaking opportunity

> Critical: Do not pitch too early. Mom Test first — let her arrive at the pain herself. If she describes the problem unprompted, that's worth more than anything you could say.

Goal of This Call

- Get real signal on her workflow and her students' workflows
- Get her buy-in on the Founding Creator program
- Get connections to creators for workflow conversations
- Plant the seed for the speaking opportunity
- Leave with clear next steps

1. Mom Test — Her Workflow (15 MIN — DON'T MENTION THE APP YET)

Open with genuine curiosity:

> "Before I pitch you anything, I want to pick your brain. Can I ask you about how you actually manage your content and camera roll?"

Questions to work through naturally:

- "How many photos do you think you have on your phone right now?"
- "When you're creating content — for yourself or teaching — how do you find the clips you need?"
- "Have you ever lost time looking for a specific piece of content?"

- "Do you organize your camera roll at all, or has that felt like too much work?"
- "What does your workflow look like from shooting to posting?"

Then go creator-specific:

- "When you think about your students — what's the biggest workflow bottleneck you see them hit?"
- "Is content organization something they struggle with or is it something else?"
- "What type of creators in your community are the most serious — treating it like a real business?"
- "At what point does a creator start to feel the pain of disorganization — is it early, or does it only matter once they're doing this full time?"
- "Is there a specific type of content where you think this would be most valuable?"

> If she describes chaos or frustration — ask what fixing it would mean. Don't name PixSort yet. Let her arrive at the solution.

2. Introduce PixSort (5 MIN)

Transition naturally once she's described the pain:

> "This is so helpful. The reason I'm asking all of this is — I've been building something that I think directly solves what you just described. Can I show you?"

Demo the before/after. 30 seconds. Let her react. Then ask:

- "Does this feel like something your students would actually use?"
- "Who in your community do you think would feel this most acutely?"
- "What threshold of creator do you think this becomes valuable at — full time, or earlier?"
- "Is there a content type where this is more valuable than others?"

3. Founding Creator Program (15 MIN)

If she's bought in, pitch the collaboration:

> "Here's what I want to propose — and I want your input on shaping it because you know your community better than I do..."

What the 10 creators get:

- Free lifetime access to PixSort (up to 40K photos processed)
- Official "PixSort Founding Creator" title — real credential for pitching future brands
- Their content featured on the PixSort website (permanent, linkable)
- Their content considered for App Store screenshots — global, permanent placement

- A real brand brief and creative direction they can add to their portfolio

What we're asking from them:

One authentic piece of content. No script, their voice. The before/after is naturally satisfying content — not a hard lift.

Questions to shape the program with her:

- "Does this feel like the right incentive or would you change something?"
- "Would you want to select the 10 yourself or should I set criteria?"
- "Would a cohort format work better than individual spots — like a challenge?"
- "Would you frame this as a brand deal experience or keep it more casual?"

Leave her with:

> "I want this to be something your students genuinely brag about being part of. The goal is that 6 months from now they're showing brands 'I was a founding creator for an AI app launch' and it actually means something."

4. Ask for Connections (5 MIN)

Let this flow naturally from the conversation — don't make it a separate agenda item:

> "Who else in the creator space do you think I should be talking to? Even just for research — I want to understand workflows before I go wide with outreach."

And directly:

> "Are there 2-3 creators in your community you'd feel comfortable connecting me with — just for a conversation about their workflow? Not a pitch."

Also ask:

- "If you were launching this, what would you do first?"
- "Is there anyone in the creator or coach space you think we're missing?"
- "Any podcast hosts, newsletter writers, or community leaders I should know?"

5. Speaking Opportunity (SAVE FOR END OR FOLLOW-UP)

Don't force this into the call — only raise it if there's time and energy. If the call goes well:

> "One more idea — would your community be open to me giving a talk? Not about PixSort specifically — something genuinely useful like how to optimize for AI search or how I use cold email to land brand > deals. Happy to make it worth their time."

6. Close the Call (5 MIN)

Confirm next steps out loud before hanging up:

- ☐ She picks 10 students (or sets criteria) — by when?
- ☐ She connects you to 2-3 creators for workflow conversations
- ☐ Speaking opportunity — date or format to explore
- ☐ Any other intros she mentioned — follow up on these immediately
- ☐ You send her a TestFlight link + Founding Creator brief after the call

Things NOT to Miss

- ☐ Let her describe the pain before you introduce the app
- ☐ Ask at what threshold of creator this becomes valuable
- ☐ Ask what content type it matters most for
- ☐ Ask for specific creator intros — not just general advice
- ☐ Ask what she would do first if she were launching this
- ☐ Get her opinion on the Founding Creator incentive — she may reshape it
- ☐ This call can double as her customer interview — fold it in naturally

Have Ready

- ☐ TestFlight link
- ☐ Before/after screen recording — show it the moment you say "let me show you"
- ☐ Founding Creator program details written out to share screen or paste
